This will run from July 5th to the 12th and will be under the direction of the Reverend J. G. Gibbons and the Reverend Glen Ash, who will be commissaries, and the Reverend R. S. H. Greene, who will be in charge of program. The program will include a daily celebration of Holy Communion, swimming and sports periods, religious instruction, square dancing, etc.

The girls' camp from July 14-21 will be under the leadership of Mrs. Evelyn Thompson, Anglican deaconess from Slave Lake. It will be for girls from 9-14 years of age. The boys' camp, from July 21-28, will be for boys from 9-14 and will be under the leadership of the Reverend Glen Ash and the Reverend R. S. H. Greene.

LAC LA BICHE — In a sudden death game Thursday afternoon Adel Abougoush's Dodgers defeated Arnold Michetti's Red Sox by an 18-8 score. The hard-hitting Dodgers caused the Red Sox to make eight errors. The Dodgers batted out 10 hits.

Father, Son Banquet Held

The annual Father and Son Banquet of the Lac la Biche Boys' Athletic League was held recently in the Memorial Hall. The main course was a serving of spaghetti and meat balls prepared by Mike Maccagno, while the dessert and serving of the meal was looked after by a group of ladies headed by Mrs. Ruth Proctor.

After the dinner the boys and their fathers went to the Aurora Theatre to see a special presentation of the 1955 Grey Cup film, featuring the Montreal Alouettes and the Edmonton Eskimos. At the conclusion of the picture and before the main show began, the league trophies were presented. Adel Abougoush, captain of the Dodgers baseball team, received, on behalf of his team, the Michael Hamar Trophy. Gordon McCormick, captain of the Red Wings hockey team, received the Hudson's Bay Co. Trophy.

Civil Defence Note Book

The only really sure way to save the lives of persons living in a city threatened by attack with hydrogen bombs is to evacuate them to areas out of the blast's long reach. This is easier said than done, for it creates many problems. Civil defence planners are certain, however, that none of these problems is impossible.

If an H-Bomb attack was on its way to North America, there would be time only to clear out. Civil defence officials emphasize that people would have to flee from wherever they happened to be in the city when the warning came.

There would be no time to return home from the office and join the family. Even those at home would have time only to grab what necessities were handy.

The chief problem of evacuation, of course, is keeping the traffic moving. Civil defence organizers plan to divide cities into sections, each one with its own exit route and destination in the country.

But as soon as he gets into the rural area, the small town or village, the city dweller who fled with scarcely more than his life would have a whole new set of problems to face.

First in the view of civil defence planners is that of reuniting families. They feel that the first thing a man who had to leave by one route for one destination while his wife and children left by another route to another destination will want to know once he escaped the immediate danger is: "Where are the wife and kids?"

Civil defence officials believe they are solving the problem of at least arranging for families to be reunited where each member is once they've left the city. But it can only be done by setting up a nationwide network of civil defence organizations, built around existing services and facilities, which include trained volunteers who know how to count and identify heads in a hurry.

The displaced city dweller will also need clothing, food, a place to sleep, and money. Civil defence aims to develop a means in every community so that these essentials could be provided if war ever makes them necessary.

The H-Bomb would wipe out whole cities and make them uninhabitable for months, years or possibly even a century or two through deadly radiation. That means many city dwellers would have to be evacuated on a permanent basis. They would have to find new homes, new jobs; in short, the whole population of some of Canada's biggest cities might have to be relocated. This would be a tremendous job, but if it were thrust upon the country by an enemy aggressor, it would have to be done. Death would be the only alternative for hundreds of thousands of city residents.

"In my opinion," says F. F. Worthington, Federal Civil Defence Co-Ordinator, "the day of the great city with its population density is ended."

"Or certainly will be ended if and when nuclear weapons are used in warfare."

"So far as we are able to determine, the best defence against nuclear weapons is space. Once a great city, such as Montreal, has been laid low by a thermonuclear weapon . . . a large area of 100 to 200 square miles in that city will be rendered uninhabitable for a very long time."

"Survivors from these areas must necessarily be distributed over small communities and newly planned and built towns."

the ship's helicopters, shows her nudging her way through heavy ice packs in the Canadian Arctic. The Labrador is engaged in surveys related to the joint Canadian-US distant early warning radar warning system. (National Defence Photo).

Succulent Salads in the Making — From large commercial undertakings such as this, as well as from smaller market gardens and farms, come the ingredients of many a tasty salad. It is becoming fairly common to start tender vegetables, such as cucumbers and tomatoes under wax-paper protective caps. This speeds early growth and protects against frost. Inset is a typical salad made from Canadian food products. Canadian salads are becoming popular all year round.

Health Unit Notes

UNDERSTANDING YOUR TEEN-AGER

Boy and Girl Friendships

Learning how to get along with members of the opposite sex is one of the most important problems that teen-agers face. Courtship, marriage and parenthood lie ahead for them in the not too distant future. In order to be able to form mature relationships later on, youngsters need lots of practice in learning how to get along with each other. Most girls and boys are awkward and confused in their first attempts to get together.

One solution for many teen-agers seems to lie in "going steady." Having a steady boy or girl friend is a kind of social security for many high school youngsters. They don't run the risk of being left out of things when they have one particular friend they can depend on.

Mothers and fathers often worry when their youngsters go steady. They feel that boys and girls will have a better basis for judging the opposite sex if they have lots of friends. Also, many parents feel that young couples who go steady may drift into a relationship that can become too close and intense. But going steady for high school boys and girls generally means one at a time, not one for always. For these youngsters the task of getting along with a different person on every date can often be overwhelming. After a teen-ager has built up confidence in his ability to get along with one person of the opposite sex, he will probably seek more variety in his friendships.

Going steady is probably not as great a hazard as some parents fear. There are positive values in this custom. Although usually short-lived, going steady gives your teen-ager an opportunity to learn how to evaluate members of the opposite sex, and a chance to make mistakes in choosing a partner at a time when the choice is not permanent and when mistakes are relatively harmless.

Teen-age interest in the other sex is normal and natural. The young person who has grown up in a home where he has been loved and valued will possess a large measure of the self-confidence and self-respect he needs to get along with members of the opposite sex. These qualities are important because a person must like himself before he can like anyone else very much. Moreover if he enjoys being a member of his own sex, he is most likely to find members of the opposite sex attractive. Young people with these feelings about themselves will not find it too difficult to establish and maintain satisfactory boy-girl relationships, even though they may experience many ups and downs as they grow to maturity.

The Wonderful Teens

Often our problems stand in the way of our helping our teen-agers with theirs. That doesn't mean that parents have to be "problemless" before they can help their youngsters to become happy, well-adjusted people. It does mean, however, that parents who are able to look at their own problems frankly and courageously and who make constructive efforts to solve them will be in a better position to understand their youngster's difficulties. And better able, too, to offer guidance and help when they are needed.

Parents whose lives are relatively full and satisfying are generally able to allow their teenagers the independence they need to become emotionally mature individuals. For emotional maturity is the goal all of us hope to achieve for our youngsters. It isn't always easy to define, but in general the emotionally healthy person has these characteristics:

1. He can love someone besides himself.
2. He can accept disappointment.
3. He can co-operate with others.
4. He can judge a situation as it is, not as he wants it to be.
5. He is self-reliant.
6. He makes effective use of his abilities.

Don't be discouraged if you don't always understand all the reasons behind your teen-ager's behavior. He doesn't understand them all himself. You don't need to feel that you're a failure when certain things puzzle you. It's your interest and your wanting to understand that count most. And don't be alarmed by any frightening talk you may hear about the turbulent teens. It's really a wonderful age. With patience, sympathetic understanding and the ability to see the humorous along with the serene side of things, you'll make out very well. And so will your teen-agers!

Home Hints

By Doris Montalpetti, D.H.E.
THE BUDS ARE BLOOMING

There's an instinctive love of flowers in all of us plus the desire to display them inside or out. Flowers can do much to dress up a room — adding beauty and fragrance like nothing else can do. If you have never bothered much with flower arrangements in your home, why not give it a fling this summer? Besides the pleasure you'll get from the added beauty to a room you are able to express yourself with flowers. Even if you don't feel you make the world's best arrangements, you'll get a good deal of satisfaction from it anyway.

The best time to gather flowers is after sundown. Or early morning before the sun is high while the dew is still on the blooms. Cut stems slantwise with a sharp knife and strip off all lower leaves. Place the cut flowers into a bucket of water to offset shock of cutting process. The cold water should come to the neck of the flowers. If you let them stand like this overnight in a cool dark place they'll be easier to arrange and last longer.

The container you select for your arrangements is very important. It must be suitable in texture and color for the flowers that go into it. Bold vivid flowers are not suited to a delicate china container. Nor would you put fragile flowers in a rough pottery container. Glazed pottery, glass, polished wood are good for all types of inbetween flowers. Avoid containers with decorative design on them — this will distract from the flowers which after all is the most important thing. Stick to a simple vase or bowl suitable in shape to the flowers and arrangement you are going to use and make.

After you have a container, the next step is a holder. Without this the flowers fall here and there and don't stay in place. The most common and useable holders are the needle and heavy wire types.

It is generally necessary to secure the needlepoint holders to the bottom of the container. Use non-hardening modelling clay.

You're ready to start your arrangement when you've selected a location, flowers, suitable vase and holder. There are about seven things you must consider. First, have contrast in shape and color of materials used. Could be gained with light-colored flowers against dark leaves. Harmony is gained by repetition, either of color or shape. Don't forget to balance your arrangement, create an impression of calm and stability. Work from the light buds and foliage at the edges to darker heavier materials at centre. Both sides of the arrangement can be virtually the same or very similar in size, direction of lines, color and textures, or the two sides can be distinctly different but have equal visual weight. If the flowers you have chosen are of different colors, group ones of the same color — the effect is more unified than a spotty arrangement. Don't forget to have a focus point. The eye should be carried immediately to the centre of interest.

Lastly, you should have a plan for an arrangement. The flowers themselves will suggest this. For long pointed types use a tall triangular form; if they are round with short stems, use a massed circular form.

Make your arrangement at the same height that it will be seen. This is a very brief outline but it gives you something to go by. Apply the principles, express your own personality and you'll see the more practice the closer you are to perfection. In the meantime you and your family can enjoy the blooms inside as well as out.
